Historical Sketch

Very little was written about Charles Weldon's formative years except that he was born in 1920 in Louisiana. His story picks up when he graduated from Louisiana State University School of Medicine, New Orleans in 1951. While attending medical school at the university, he met Patricia McCreedy, who was also a medical student. Shortly after they graduated, they married, settled in Maringouin, a small town in Louisiana, and set up a family practice. They also had three children; Becky, Ray, and Walter.

Practicing medicine in a small town had its disadvantages. Being the only doctors in the area, the Weldon family was unable to take vacations or travel. They also felt that they were not being professionally challenged. They got the idea to move on when Patricia read a book by Margaret Mead titled Coming of Age in Samoa. They applied to American Samoa for the positions as Public Health Officer (Patricia) and Pediatrician (Charles). Both were accepted and so, moved their family to American Samoa in 1961.

Their stay in American Samoa was successful both for the Weldons and the people they treated. As Director of Medical Services for the Territory of American Samoa, Dr. Weldon developed a comprehensive health system, reduced infant mortality to United States rates, and eliminated Tuberculosis as a significant problem. The Weldons planned to stay in Samoa for one to two years, and in 1963, they decided it was time to move on.

They enjoyed government service, so they looked for positions with U. S. government agencies. Dr. Weldon's supervisor suggested they contact the Agency for International Development (USAID) in the Department of State. They were hired, with Dr. Charles Weldon given the position of Chief of Public Health Division, USAID-Laos. The Weldons remained in Laos 1974. Dr. Weldon retired from USAID in 1977.

Their fourteen years in Laos was productive and at times, dangerous. It was while serving in Laos that Dr. Weldon became acquainted with Air America. Many of the areas that Dr. Weldon supported were remote and almost inaccessible without the use of air support. In fact, outside of the major cities, the main mode of transportation was by rivers, walking, or flying. Because of this, Dr. Weldon frequently flew around Laos on Air America, usually on their Helio Couriers, Pilatus Porters, and H-34 helicopters, since these aircraft were capable of landing and taking off from short, unimproved runways. Flying as much as he did, Weldon got to know and become close friends many of the Air America pilots who often risked their lives getting Weldon out of dangerous situations.

Upon their arrival in Laos in 1963, health care, compared to Western standards, was non-existent. There were only seven Laotian doctors in the entire country with a ratio of one doctor to 500,000 people. As if high infant birth mortality rates, disease, and a poor health care system were not bad enough, war between the Communist Pathet Lao and the Royal Laotian Government produced large numbers of casualties. The civil war also resulted in refugees fleeing from the communist forces.

In 1977, Dr. Weldon retired from USAID, but did not retire from practice. From 1977-1978 he served as advisor to the Royal Planning Commission, Saudi Arabia, on the Jubail Project, and from 1978-1979 he set up a private group practice that provided emergency services under contract to Chamette General Hospital in New Orleans.

In 1979, Dr. Weldon retired and moved to the Philippines where he volunteered with the Catholic Relief Services as medical coordinator providing health care to Lao refugees in Thailand.
